On November 1998, we were informed of concerns about the high-pressure working environment¹ for students in the laboratory of a PI² who receives significant support from NSF. We spoke with the PI's program officer and agreed that there was no indication that the working environment in the PI's laboratory was so unusual as to warrant our involvement. We learned that the PI's university had been in the process of taking actions to address the stress associated with graduate student life. We determined that the circumstances of this matter did not require further inquiry by our office. This case is closed.
